Administrative history / Biographical sketch

Note

On February 26, 1979, after a series of casual meetings, Raj Chouhan, Harinder Mahil, and Charan Gill formed the Farm Workers' Organizing Committee (FWOC) in the Fraser Valley of British Columbia. They were joined at this first official meeting by Sarwan Sidhu, Pritam Singh, Amarit Pal Mann, and Gurnam Sahota. Sarwan Boal and Judy Cavanagh soon joined the FWOC as organizers. A series of public meetings followed to spread awareness of the new group, address farmworkers' concerns, and advocate for their rights. In the spring of 1980, at a founding convention, members of the FWOC formally established the Canadian Farmworkers Union (CFU). Chouhan was president, Jawala Singh Grewal was vice-president, Gill was secretary, and Boal was treasurer. Cavanagh was a chief organizer. The motto of the CFU was "Zindabad!" ("Long live!" in Urdu). Areas of concern and action for this new union included farmworkers' pay, housing, working conditions, and work-related legislation. The CFU advocated for childcare for farmworkers and raised awareness of the racism the predominantly Indo-Canadian workers often faced, and also participated in numerous rights-related events and causes in solidarity with other organizations. The CFU was assisted financially by the Canadian Labour Congress (CLC) from founding until 1991.

In 1979 the FWOC began publishing The Farmworker, a Punjabi/English newspaper with the purpose of educating workers about their rights on the job and their right to organize. The CFU continued publishing this paper through the mid-1990s.

In the early 1980s the CFU focused on recruiting members and gaining certification at some farms, and also picketed and fought in court to defend farmworkers' right to unionize and to protect workers from mistreatment by farm owners. In November of 1980, the collective agreement signed by the CFU and Bell Farms was the first ever signed by a union representing farmworkers in Canada. The union was also particularly vocal about the exclusion of farmworkers from various legislation protecting other workers' rights and safety. In 1983, farmworkers became eligible for Workers' Compensation Board benefits, but were still mainly exempt from health and safety regulations.

In its early years, the CFU tried to organize farmworkers outside the Fraser Valley and Lower Mainland, reaching out to workers in the BC Okanagan and Ontario. It did not succeed in the Okanagan, due to conflict between CFU executives and local organizers, and in Ontario its success lasted only a few years. In addition to its unionization and advocacy work, the CFU responded to its membership's needs with relevant educational programming. In 1982 the union began running "ESL Crusade" classes, developed specifically for Punjabi-speaking farmworkers and including both everyday and farmwork-specific English lessons. The "preventable homicide" of worker Jarnail Singh Deol by pesticide exposure led to the establishment of the Deol Agricultural Education and Research Society (the Deol Society) in 1983, as an internal branch of CFU created for the purpose of applying separately from the union for funding grants. The Deol Society's main concern was education of farmworkers on the health risks and safe handling of pesticides, and it also ran ESL programs. In many projects, jurisdiction was shared by the Deol Society and the CFU.

The CFU researched a wide variety of subjects related to farmworkers and workers in general, in order to educate its members and spread awareness of many issues, from global struggles for workers' and women's rights to immigration and multiculturalism in Canada. CFU executives and members participated in union, labour, and activist groups and committees, and were vocal in numerous letter-writing, fundraising, and awareness campaigns. The union also participated in rallies and protests on many subjects.

By the mid-1980s the CFU was nearly bankrupt due to the ongoing difficulty of collecting dues from underpaid seasonal workers. The union briefly considered merging with other similar unions but, convinced of the unique needs of its membership, it was determined to retain its own name.

In 1986, Chouhan stepped down, principal organizer Judy Cavanagh and founding member Charan Gill left, and Sarwan Boal became president. Boal was replaced in 1991 by Jawala Singh Grewal.

In the 1990s, the provincial New Democratic Party government extended health and safety legislation to farmworkers, solving one of the CFU's main areas of concern. The Progressive Intercultural Community Services Society (PICS, formerly Progressive Indo-Canadian Community Services Society) and its founder, Charan Gill, took over management of the union and its work. The CFU still exists in name, but is essentially inactive.

Custodial history

The records in the first accession were maintained by Charan Gill until the time of their donation to Simon Fraser University (SFU) in 2006. An inventory of the records was created by students under the direction of SFU professor Hari Sharma prior to their donation to SFU. Two further boxes of material were donated by Raj Chouhan in 2010, and additional material was contributed by Craig Berggold in 2012 on behalf of Charan Gill. These first three accessions were processed as one unit (MsC 102).

A small amount of material was donated by Craig Berggold in September, 2013, including documents from Harinder Mahil, a founding member of the CFU. This material has been arranged in Accession 4 (MsC 102b). Further material was donated by Berggold in December, 2013, which has been arranged in Accession 5 (MsC 102c). A series of electronic records collected and created by Berggold in the process of writing a book about the CFU was donated by Berggold in January, 2014, and has been arranged in Accession 6 (MsC 102d).

Scope and content

The collection reflects the many aspects of the Canadian Farmworkers Union's organization and its actions, including unionizing workers and certifying workplaces, advocating for workers' rights, providing ESL classes and other educational programs, and speaking out on behalf of other workers' rights and social rights in Canada and around the world. Records include administrative documents, financial records, internal and external correspondence, reference material on a variety of subjects, publications, and numerous photographs of events and activities.

The majority of the material in the collection was created or received by the CFU in the course of its work, but some material, such as the Charan Gill photographs and Craig Berggold book research records, was created by others in relation to the CFU.

The collection has been arranged into nine series: Administrative records (1974-2010); Event photographs ([198--1985]); Union action records ([1978]-1997); Programming and project records ([1965]-Printed 2013 (originally created 1986)); Research and advocacy records ([197-]-2011); Deol Society records (1977-1998); Canadian Farmworkers Union Ontario photographs and administrative records ([1979?]-1983); Charan Gill photographs ([199-]); and Craig Berggold book research records ([201-]-2013).

Notes

Title notes

- Source of title proper: Title based on contents of collection.

Arrangement

The material was received with no evident original order. Many files were mislabelled or unlabelled, and much of the material was loose in boxes. The files were arranged into series by the archivist. A small number of file titles in the first accession contained evidence of an original numbering system (e.g. "Internal S-4 AD"), but there were too few of these to inform a recreation of the original filing system.

An inventory done of the first three accessions by students of SFU Professor Hari Sharma before donation did not impose any organization. Some materials were numbered in pen, generally in the upper right corner, during the inventory process, and identifying notes including dates or subject clarification were added to some materials in pencil.

Photographs have been numbered consecutively in the format "102.1;" the photographs contained in each file are noted in the file or item description. Craig Berggold assisted the archivist with identifying many of the photographs.

Items available on The Canadian Farmworkers Union Project website were digitized before the collection was processed, and some materials were digitized but not donated with the collection, therefore most but not all items on the website are present in the collection; digitized items have been identified in the file or item description. In some cases, the item in the collection is a copy or slightly different version of the digitized item; these situations have also been noted in the file or item descriptions.

Consult staff for access to oversize or electronic records.

Alternative form available

Digitized materials are available for research in SFU Digitized Collections: <https://digital.lib.sfu.ca/cfu-2-collection/canadian-farmworkers-union-collection>

Restrictions on access

Access to some files is restricted for privacy reasons. See file descriptions for restrictions. Consult staff for more information.

Conditions governing use

Reproduction of material is subject to approval by Special Collections staff and any copyright holders. Copyright in many of the photographs in the collection is held by Craig Berggold and his permission is required for their use or reproduction; not all of Berggold's photographs are identified as such, though some are identified on The Canadian Farmworkers Union Project website.

Finding aids

File and item level descriptions are available. Additional descriptive and contextual information for digitized items has been provided by Craig Berggold and is available on the website.

Accruals

Further accruals are expected.

Note [generalNote]:

The Farm and Ranch Safety and Health Agency (FARSHA) was started by the Canadian Farmworkers Union, Workers' Compensation Board, and the BC Agricultural Council in 1993 when occupational health and safety laws were extended to cover agricultural workers. The organization provides training, consultation, and promotion of worker safety. CFU members still hold Board seats in FARSHA.

Operation Solidarity was one of many coalitions of unions and activist organizations formed in BC in 1983 in response to budget cuts and new bills cutting social services and union rights which were enacted by the Social Credit government under Premier Bill Bennett. This coalition, which was started by the BC Federation of Labour, organized numerous rallies and demonstrations. Operation Solidarity was formed mainly of union groups, while the related Solidarity Coalition, to which the CFU also belonged, consisted mainly of activists and community members.

The Pesticide Registration Review was a series of public hearings held across Canada by the federal government, inviting submissions from businesses, workers, and individuals on the use of pesticides. A multidisciplinary task force was formed to make recommendations following these hearings. CFU President Sarwan Boal represented the Canadian Labour Congress on the Pesticide Registration Review Team.

The Vancouver Sath theatre group was formed out of the Vancouver Sath Literary and Cultural Association, a Punjabi writers' and activists' group based on the concept of a Sath, an informal gathering place in a Punjabi village. Vancouver Sath published Watno Dur, a monthly Punjabi literary and cultural magazine, which included articles on employment of Punjabi immigrants in BC, racism, and the political situation in Punjab. The group later also published Watan: A Quarterly of Punjabi Language, Literature, and Culture and the related magazine Ankur. Theatre was seen as a way to reach the wider community with the association's messages. One of Vancouver Sath's first plays was Picket Line, written by Sadhu Binning and Sukhwant Hundal and based on the Hoss Farming Company strike in 1984. In 1988, Vancouver Sath produced A Crop of Poison, a play examining pesticide use and related health problems for farmworkers. These plays were performed at CFU events, other cultural events, and in the community.
